

Dr A N VENKATESH

Dr A N Venkatesh, is the current president of Society for Emergency Medicine, India (SEMI). He is working as Sr. Consultant and Head of Emergency Department at Apollo Hospitals, Bangalore, India.

Since graduation from Medical College Dr A N VENKATESH has had keen interest in Emergency care. He trained in the Emergency Medicine and completed his Fellowship in Emergency Medicine. He went on to complete Membership of Royal college of Emergency Medicine (MRCEM), UK. He has understood the importance of managerial skills in the field of Emergency Medicine and has successfully completed PG certified course in Hospital Management from the esteemed XLRI, Jamshedpur, India. He has many publications and posters presented and published at national and international levels.

Dr A N VENKATESH has worked in speciality for more than two decades and has been at the forefront of establishing emergency centers and running them successfully. He has been a key figure in helping department to flourish and prosper. He is also working hard to get training in Emergency medicine more freely available across the country and collaborating with well-established colleges like RCEM to ensure quality driven training available locally.

Dr A N VENKATESH has been a key figure in SEMI over the years, he has been National treasurer, state president of SEMI for Karnataka Chapter and is now the National president of SEMI. During his tenure as State President he has worked hard to help Emergency Medicine spread its wings far and wide. He has further worked tirelessly as national treasurer towards a prosperous and ever growing organisation. Having started its footprint across the country now Dr A N VENKATESH is working towards more international collaboration and exposure to the field of Emergency Medicine in India.